WHAT'S IN A NAME

EMPLOYEE, MANAGER, OR INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR?

By Stephen Portman
Finding out what your rights are at work can be a complicated process in today's precarious workplace. The BC Employment Standards Act (the Act) sets out protections for employees, but employers sometimes use exemptions, built into the law, to deprive workers of the wages they are entitled to.

Your legal rights as a worker often depend on the nature of the work you do and how your job is defined. Managers have fewer protections under the Act than employees, and independent contractors have no protections under the Act at all. But a job title like "manager" and even a signed contract that states that you are an "independent contractor" are not always enough to exempt you from your legal rights as a worker. To be sure you are paid every nickel and dime you earn, it is important to know how the law works.

The BC Employment Standards Act applies to employees regardless of whether they are employed on a part-time, full-time, temporary or permanent basis. An "employee" is a person receiving or entitled to receive wages for work, and includes people being trained by an employer for the employer's business, as well as people who are on leave from their work, and those who are not currently working at their job but who can be recalled to their job.

Employee or Manager?

Managers do receive some protections under the Act but are exempt from rules governing hours of work, overtime and statutory holidays

NEW ID CLINICS THIS FALL

By Doug King

TAPS is once again partnering with Pro Bono Students Canada, the office of MLA Carole James, the Greater Victoria Public Library, and Our Place Society for another year of identification clinics.

Last year the clinics helped over 250 people with applications for their primary and secondary ID documents, and we were still not able to meet the demand. The clinics have been renewed for a second year, now with resources for a third pro bono student to help carry the load.

Losing ID can have a profound impact on a person's life, especially if that person is trying to access banking services, health care, housing, or provincial benefits. A lack of primary ID can be a significant barrier, and sadly we have seen far too many people threatened with a loss of housing or benefits as a result of having inadequate or no ID.

Over the course of our first year of clinics, we learned how to most effectively submit applications for ID. BC Vital Statistics agreed to waive fees for applications if clients provided additional paperwork. We also made connections with workers at Cool Aid who could support people who needed guarantors for their applications.

UPCOMING ID CLINICS

Lost all your ID? Can't afford to replace it? These free ID clinics can help.

You must register first, which you can do at the clinic location at 9 am on the day of the clinic. Clinics run from 10 am to 1 pm. First come, first served.

While in the first year the unexpected popularity of the clinics and the shocking complexity of some of the applications made the process slow and frustrating for some clients, I'm confident that this year our ID clinics will be better than ever, and we'll be able to help even more people. ■

TAPS IS MOVING!

Hold onto your hats—TAPS is moving! After 10 years at our current location, we move into our new home, just one block away, at the end of October.

Moving is never easy, and when the owners of our current building told us they had sold it to developers looking to create an assisted living facility, we worried we might not be able to find another place downtown we could afford.

Luckily, our friends at the Society of St. Vincent De Paul, who are just about to celebrate 100 years in our community, had office space coming open in their building at 828 View Street, just around the corner from TAPS. We worked out an arrangement with them, and that's where we're going. You may be familiar with this address: it's where St. Vincent's was running their Social Concern Office until recently.

Our new building will be a step up in many respects. TAPS has grown a lot in the last ten years, and we've been in desperate need of more space. The office at 828 View Street has more room for staff and volunteers, as well as a large area where we can hold community events. And as a ground level storefront office, we can say: goodbye unreliable elevator!

We look forward to welcoming our clients and supporters to the new office once we are settled. And we'll be doing our best to ensure a smooth transition, with as little disruption as possible for our clients.

Please note that TAPS will be closed on October 25th and 26th, and there will be no tax clinic on October 25th. Look for us to re-open at our new location in the first week of November.

that apply to regular employees.

The Employment Standards Regulation defines a manager as a person whose principle employment responsibilities are supervising or directing human or other resources, or a person employed in an executive capacity.

In most cases, determining who is a manager involves an investigation into the type of workplace duties an individual performs and the nature of the relationship between this individual and the employer. In some cases your job title may be “manager” even though the law would find that you’re actually an employee.

Let’s take the example of someone I’ll call Martha. Martha is a shift manager at a fast food restaurant where she gives direction to members of the team while also preparing food and taking orders from customers. She does not have the ability to discipline, hire, or fire staff, and she is not authorised to make any decisions about day-to-day operations like setting menu prices or hours of operation. She has a supervisor above her who she reports to, and the supervisor has to report to the restaurant owner. The limits of Martha’s actual work role means she is much more likely to be considered an employee under the Act than a manager.

However, because Martha’s employer considered her to be a manager, Martha was not being paid overtime wages. Martha filed a complaint with the Employment Standards Branch (the “Branch”), and the Branch determined that Martha was indeed an employee and not a manager, regardless of her job title, and was therefore entitled to receive overtime pay the same as any other worker. The restaurant was required to pay Martha all outstanding wages she was entitled to.

Employee or Independent Contractor?

Independent contractors are fully exempt from the protections in the Employment Standards Act. However, “independent contractor” is defined narrowly, and the onus is on the employer to demonstrate that a worker is in fact an independent contractor and not an employee entitled to the protection in the Act.

In order to prove that a worker is exempt from the protections in the Act, an employer needs to show that the worker is truly independent. Essentially, the employer needs to demonstrate that the worker is in business for themselves. In order to determine whether a person is an independent contractor or an employee, adjudicators from the Employment Standards Branch look at the degree of independence the worker has over their work, the control by the employer of the worker, and the worker's opportunity for profit or loss.

For example, "Ronald" is a tile installer. A tiling company provided Ronald with an indefinite contract to lay tile at a rate of $25 per hour, 40 hours per week. The tiling company supplied all of the tools and materials for the work, set a schedule, and administered payments. The tile company refused to pay statutory holiday pay, vacation pay or overtime, claiming that Ronald was not an employee. Ronald filed a complaint with the Branch, which found that, as he was not free to pursue independent contracts, was economically dependent on the work that he performed, and his work was ultimately under the control of the company, he was an employee entitled to be paid all outstanding wages.

The Employment Standards Act is there to protect workers. If your employer alleges that you are an independent contractor or manager and that you are therefore not entitled to basic protections, it is best to call the Employment Standards Branch directly or get in touch with an advocate. ■

VICTORIA TENANT ACTION GROUP: BRING OUT THE VOTE

By Madyson Powell and Emily Rogers

There's a municipal election coming up on October 20, and those of us who are renters in Victoria have a chance to get our voices heard and have our values represented in municipal office.

In 2017, the TAPS Tenancy Project got together with local tenants who had been displaced from their homes to create the Victoria Tenant Action Group

(VTAG). The goal of VTAG is to provide support and education, as well as a forum for activism, for people who do not own their homes in the Greater Victoria region. VTAG has grown significantly over the past 18 months and is now a formal non-profit society. Most recently, VTAG launched the Municipal Election Renters Mobilization campaign (MERM).

In light of the upcoming municipal election, VTAG is working to ensure that renters, who make up 60 percent of Victoria's inhabitants, have their values represented in municipal office. We want municipal governments to protect the quality and quantity of existing rental stock and increase the stock of genuinely affordable rental housing, thereby fostering the dignity and quality of life of renters and all members of our community who do not own their home.

Because it can be hard to comb through each candidate's platform, we at VTAG are working to make relevant information accessible to voters. We have sent a survey to the 2018 municipal candidates asking them to present their positions on the ever-present housing crisis, and will be packaging the results into a fact sheet designed to help renters determine which candidates reflect their values and prioritize their needs. The fact sheet will be available at www.victoriatenants.com and in pamphlet form at VTAG events.

Interested in getting involved? Here's how:

- Pledge to cast an informed vote on election day: www.tinyurl.com/rentersvote
- Become a member: join the Victoria Tenant Action Group at www.victoriatenants.com and be a part of a community of care and action
- Volunteer with VTAG to help engage other community members, write your candidates, or organize in your neighbourhood. ■

WELCOME, MADYSON

We would like to welcome Madyson Powell to TAPS. Madyson is our Social Work Practicum Student this year, and she is working in disability advocacy and tenancy, as well as helping out in the ID Project. We are all thrilled to have Madyson on the TAPS team, and look forward to working with her through the fall and into 2019.
